

Tasting Notes

Henkenberg wines are always very balanced and harmonious. They show an excellent ratio of acid, tannins and extract. They also have a lot of fruity and spicy aromas. This variety of aromas also represents the diversity of the soil on the Henkenberg. In the elegant vintage of 2016, a large part was fermented with stems and the mash was processed very gently to preserve the pure fruit of the Pinot Noir berries, supported by an invigorating acidity of that 2016 vintage.

Vinyard, Soil

The Henkenberg denomination stretches out on an exposed ridge between Oberrotweil and Burkheim towards the west. The soil mainly consists of weathered volcanic rock, garnet and loess in some places. Its coarse composition made up of different layers offers ideal ground for growing deep rooting vines. The Henkenberg has a south and southwest exposure. It is named for being the site of the gallows in medieval times.

Winemaking

The average yield for this wine is around 40 hectoliters per hectare. The grapes are fermented with 50 % of their stems. After meticulous sorting of the grapes the mash goes through cooled maceration for an average of 7 days. Following this, the wine starts an open fermentation process with its natural yeasts at temperatures between 25° and 33° C. During this process tannins and color are released from the skins through frequent pumpovers and punching down of the skin cap. The wines usually ferment for 7-12 days. Once the fermentation comes to an end, they are pressed and filled into used burgundy style oak barrels. The wood for these barrels is won from our own trees in the Kaiserstuhl and shipped to selected Tonneleries in Burgundy for processing. After aging in new oak for an average of 12 months the wine is bottled without filtration. Hence some turbidity may occur, which however adds to the wines complexity and aging potential.
